

As Good As Done

Senior year is a time of numerous "lasts." We experience our last First Day of High School, our last fall and winter homecoming, our last athletic practice/game/meet/match, our last drama performance or band and choir concert. It's also a time for reflection: a time when "Do you remember . . .?" becomes a key phrase of our vocabulary. We realize that after thirteen years, this is our last year together. We're finally moving on. The preparation for our entrance into the "real world" is nearing an end. We finally understand that no matter how often we come home, it will never be the same. We're taking an irreversible step forward; one that will change most of our lives more than they've ever been changed before. And yet, it's a change from which many of us will learn and better ourselves. One day in the near future when we're seated on the football field with the rest of the Class of 1995, we should take a final look backwards before taking those steps forward to receive our diplomas.
